Worship At Home

Lesson for May 12, 1963

A man sat down some years ago to write a book about the Kingdom of God. Where is it? was his question. He believed that the Kingdom comes wherever God's will is done, so that we cannot say it is all here or all there. God's will may never be fully done on earth, but it is done more in some places and by some people than in other places and by other people. In all the institutions of society, where is the will of God best done? To put it another way, what institution of society is most like heaven?

Where Religion Begins

It is no surprise to be told that this author argued that the place most like heaven on this earth is the home. International relations, he thought, are the area farthest from the will of God. This is no surprise either; but that is another story.) The home, in fact, is where religion begins. If you wanted to get rid of religion, as the communists do, the place to attack is not the church but the home. Keep people from having a normal home life and religion will dry out at the roots. The home is where we first hear the name of God; it is where we first learn to pray; there we hear the Bible read, there we are taught what forgiveness means, there we learn Christian habits and feel the first stirrings of Christian ambition and ideals. Modern Christian teachers of young people do not think of the home, as maybe our parents did, as a force for good which is a great help to school and church; it is the other way around. School and church-including church school—are aids to the home.

To be better than one's father and mother is an ambition most people would say is impossible. Some one has suggested that we cannot be more devoted to God, more fully given up to His will and service, than were the best Christians of centuries ago; in short, that there are no persons in our present world who are more saintly than some of our forebearers. What can be true of this generation, however is that there can be, and in places is, a clearer knowledge of what devotion to God's will demands. To put it another way, in our hearts' devotion we cannot hope to measure up to our forefathers; but in the ways in which that devotion may be turned to practical purposes, we may go beyond them.

Now the writer of Psalm 78 certainly believed that it is in the home that we learn to be better (more obedient to God) than those who went before us. How can this be? It can be, because in each home there is something greater and better even than the parents: the law of God, or as we would say, the Bible. All the advice of father and mother is subject to error and sin; but God's word can be taught by parents to children, and there is no advice better than is given by the Holy Spirit.

The Home is a School

Each God-fearing home is a link in a long chain, a part of a great School of Goodness. The Psalmist of old thought of the parents as teachers, and he is still right. How does the home teach? In three ways: First by the Word of God, as was just now said. The habit of using the Bible, of studying it; if not learned at home will not be learned elsewhere. But the good home teaches not by words alone, but by example. Many of us define a Christian by describing the sort of people our parents were. Religion on two feet is religion we can understand. You can argue about theology and theories; but a genuine Christian is his own argument. If we are Christians because our fathers were, that is the way God planned it. But the teaching of the home is more than Bible study and good example. The home is a place where we learn to do by doing. The many situations that test our tempers, the many occasions to get into a quarrel or to settle things peacefully, the opportunities to be generous, the disappointments and sorrows, as well as the joys and accomplishments which we experience in a good home, are all part of the training God offers us in the use and meaning of life.

Dear Sir:

I found a Kodak (small) Brownie Starflex Camera while I was visiting there.

I finished taking the roll of films in it and had them developed thinking I might know who it beloned to but I do not know who the baby is.

I am sending you all the pictures so you might put one of them in your paper and if someone recognized it I will gladly send them the Kodak if they will write me. Hoping to find who it belongs to.

Sincerely
Mrs. T. C. Wingfield

(If it is your camera and your baby, you may have both by properly identifying them at the TIMES-VIRGINIAN office. ED.)

Johnny C. Wright On Destroyer

USS TIDEWATER (FHTNC)—Johnny C. Wright, radarman seaman, USN, son of Mr. and Mrs. George R. Wright of Route 2, Appomattox, Va., is serving aboard the destroyer tender USS Tidewater, an Atlantic Fleet unit which returned, April 6, after six weeks training operations in the Caribbean.

During the cruise, the Tidewater spent three weeks at San Juan, Puerto Rico, giving the crew the opportunity to see many attractions of the four - hundred year old city.

The Tidewater is homeported at Norfolk, Va.

Pastor Says

MOTHER'S DAY

Sunday is Mother's Day. Most of the churches of America will emphasize this in their services. Some will honor the oldest and youngest mother present. Many will be wearing a red flower if their mother is living. Others will wear a white one if mother has passed on. Why this emphasis? Why so much emphasis upon Motherhood? Perhaps the answer lies in the fact that Christian Motherhood is among the higher achievements of life.

According to W. S. Kaltenbacker in the Courier - Journal of Louisville, Ky., May 31, 1925 issue, Miss May Sasseen of Henderson, Ky., was the first to conceive the idea of Mother's Day. As a school teacher she led her pupils in honoring on the third Sunday in April, their mothers who were deceased. This was continued as long as she lived, but sometime later the date was changed to the second Sunday in May, as a climax to Christian Endeavor work.

What Miss Sasseen began, of course, comes out of the recognition of motherhood as given in the Bible, the Book of Wisdom for all ages.

The seer of Proverbs thirty-one portrays in a vervel picture the portrait of a godly mother. Her charm, it reveals commands respect; her loyalty to God and to her husband defies criticism; and her desire to protect the children and interest of the husband makes her the major influence in the home.

In Indiana some years ago, while visiting one of our church families, the husband was showing me around the farm. He had a dog who had just had a litter of puppies. As he made an attempt to pick up one of the little puppies, the mother dog protested in a manner which makes all obey. The instinct of motherhood would not allow one of her little ones to be handled. She protected with all the vigor of her nature.

This instinct to love and protect is a part of the built - in nature of motherhood. When this is re-inforced by the wisdom and Love of God, and the genuine love and concern of a Godly father, influences are thrown around the home which can stand the tension of a mad and cruel world system.

Parents, you will read again with profit this thirty - first chapter of Proverbs. Take time to do this and then be found in God's house this Mother's Day with your family. The best image God can give of his desired relationship with his people is the image of family life. He says, "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God!" I John 3:1.

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of our dear sister and daughter Ada Garrett who passed away two years ago, May 9,
Gone is the face we loved so dear,
Silent is the voice we loved to hear,
Too far away for sight or speech,
But not too far for thoughts to reach.
Two years have passed
Yet time has stood still,
There's a vacant spot in our hearts
That can never be filled.
Sleep on dear Ada
And take your rest,
God called you home,
He loved you best. 5-9-1p

Correction

One of the three YWA Citation winners from Pamplin in the front page picture on May 2, Mary Wilson McCleney, was listed in the writeup, but her name was omitted in the listing of all those present in the photograph. She was definitely was there—is definitely a citation winner, and is definitely to be found on the second row sixth from the left. Our congratulations to all three winners, and an apology for the omission of Mary McCleney's name.
